Education

The Education component of RESTORE focuses on building knowledge, skills, and capacity across individuals, families, providers, and systems. Education serves as a delivery mechanism to translate research and best practices into practical, accessible learning opportunities that support whole-life outcomes. Educational efforts include training modules, workshops, toolkits, and technical assistance designed to improve understanding of health, behavioral health, disability supports, transition planning, and community-based services. Emphasis is placed on equitable access, plain-language resources, and universal instructional approaches to ensure materials are inclusive and usable across diverse populations.
